Moodle 1.9 Tip: Course Compile

Did you know you can compile a Moodle course for printing or on-screen reading? CTET has developed a tutorial to show you and your students how in this Moodle 1.9 Course Compile tutorial:

http://youtu.be/kpgWyoZmcUo

Note: this is for the current version of Moodle (1.9) Thanks to David Black for the suggestion!

Faculty 411

Issue 3
Apr – Jun 2012

Upcoming Faculty Development Events

Instructional Skills Workshop (ISW)
May 8 - 10
3 days, on campus (Next one will be in November)
Facilitators: Chris Brown & Jessica Mussell
Seats still available!

Instructional Skills Workshop Online (ISWO)
May 9- June 3
4 weeks, online
Facilitators: BJ Eib & David Stevenson
Register: email eden.jaycock@royalroads.ca
Full – now waitlisting

Collaborate v. 11
Moderator Training
May 22 & 29, 1:30pm
Two separate days, online – must do Levels 1 & 2 on your own first!
Facilitators: Terri Bateman & Donna Dowling
Register: email tamiaj@royalroads.ca or accept the meeting request circulated to faculty & staff

Past Kelly Award Winners
Top (from L): Gerry Kelly with Alejandro Palacios, Jennifer Walinga, Pille Bunnell, Glenn Brown
Bottom (from L): Steve Sakiyama & David Reagan, David Black, Gerry Kelly, Micki Noble, Zhenyi Li, Brent Mainprize

2012 Kelly Outstanding Teaching Award Call for Nominations

The Gerry Kelly Outstanding Teaching Award strives to recognize a Core Faculty or Associate Faculty member who is deemed to be representative of outstanding teachers at RRU, while making a positive contribution to the overall health and culture of the university.

All core and associate faculty members (including lab instructors) who are actively engaged in teaching for-credit courses to Royal Roads learners are eligible, provided they have taught a minimum of 3 times at RRU and agree to share their approach to teaching and learning with the RRU community.

Faculty are nominated by a 3-person team, who can be fellow faculty members, students, staff or alumni. Along with a nomination form submitted by the nominating team, nominees must submit the following in order for their nomination to stand: a Statement of Teaching Philosophy, a Reflective Practice Statement, and a list of RRU courses taught.

Nomination deadline is Monday, May 7 at 9am.

Further information about the award, as well as the online nomination form is at: http://bit.ly/Ja7Nnc

Questions about the award or the process? Contact: tamiaj@royalroads.ca
Dr. Boyd’s New Book:
The Environmental Rights Revolution

Here is an excerpt from the publisher’s description:

This important and timely book not only demonstrates that enshrining environmental protection into national constitutions has the power to make sustainability a priority, it tells inspiring stories about the difference the right to a healthy environment is making in people’s lives.

---

Roger Girouard receives student kudos for online course experiences

Roger Girouard wasn’t sure about moving his on-campus Human Security & Peace building course online. Like many instructors, the word “trepidation” came readily to mind!

However, his CTET ID helped him to “translate”, and he was able to build a high quality learning experience online.

Keys to his success include: strong instructor presence and strong start to each content unit through the use of audio.

One student wrote, “…you started off with the recorded mini-lecture, questions to focus discussion, and especially the mid-week feedback and follow-up questions […this is], going a long way toward revitalizing the program”.

Congratulations, Roger!

CTET: What is a QR Code?

LR: QR is short for Quick Response. They are those little tiny squares that look like crossword puzzles that appear on products, advertising posters, and in magazines and newspapers.

CTET: Tell us about the activity you designed using QR Codes...

LR: I was looking for a new way to introduce myself to my learners (in the MALAT course: LRNT 505). I like to do something digital, beyond just text and pictures. I put the question out to the Twitter-sphere, and someone suggested QR Codes. I’ve seen them, I have a code reader on my phone, but I had never been too intrigued by them, seeing them as a clever marketing device for mobile devices, not much more.

Besides being privileged enough to work for Royal Roads as associate faculty, I spend my days as an IT teacher in a middle school in Duncan. I started printing out QR codes that directed students to Grammar help sites, or little messages like “Have you done your Homework?” or even links to the Honey Badger video. These I scattered surreptitiously all over the school, and watched amused as the students tried equally furtive methods to try to read them without being seen.

What I discovered in my MALAT course was that the learners were as intrigued by the look and variety of codes as I was, and many new possibilities opened up for sharing information.

---

CTET: How did it go? What worked (or not)?

LR: As soon as I started researching QR codes, I found that they are much more than just a gimmicky way to push out a website. And, they are also available in a plethora of styles and purposes. You can create QR codes that are multi-coloured or have your picture or a logo embedded, and they can link to websites, photos, address or contact information, dates and calendars, or even just a text message. Suddenly, the possibility of creating a scavenger-style hunt that was colourful and inviting, AND led down all different kinds of paths was so exciting. It’s amazing what enthralls geeks like me sometimes...

In the end, my introduction was half as wordy and infinitely richer than if I had just written a typical paragraph and added a few pictures.

I was thrilled with the outcome, and it led to some “subversive” teaching.